ADDRESS.

In issuing this Volume of "Index to the British Catalogue," the Compiler takes the opportunity of expressing his regret for the unavoidable delay in its publication. His numerous engagements, indeed, have at times almost induced him to withdraw from the undertaking; but having found much valuable assistance in the engagement of Mr. Crestadoro, he has at length been enabled to bring his labours to a close. The Index, including Two Supplements, comprehends the publications of 1837 to the close of 1857; and, although sensible of its many defects, the Compiler has the satisfaction of believing that it will be found of considerable service.

It is necessary to explain that the main portion of the Index (1837 to 1855) does not refer to every book, but to such only as required to be collected under a given head: thus, for instance, individual Biography or Works of Fiction, unless embracing any special subject, will not be found in the Index, because that would be a mere repetition of the regular Alphabetical portion of the Catalogue.

There has always been an acknowledged difficulty in adopting a system of Classification: but in the Indices appended to the Catalogues of 1855 and 1856, a new mode was attempted, in following out the author's own definition of his book by presenting a Concordance of Titles. This attempt was found to combine many advantages, and has been generally approved of.

The Index for 1857 will be found to have made another step in advance, developing more fully the system henceforth to be adopted in the Annual Catalogues; and although the space allotted to each work is small, much information is compressed into that space — the reference number to the full title (to be found appended to the bi-monthly numbers of the Publishers' Circular, or to the Annual Catalogue) amply compensating for the previous brevity.

It is a source of gratification to the Compiler, in publishing this result of the labours of many years, that, whatever faults it may possess, he has at least laid the foundation for a more perfect and useful Catalogue, to be put forth at some future period either by himself or others.
